WRITING

Hi! I'm Alisa from Russia. And I'm glad that I can tell you about changes that have been taken place over the last twenty years in the way that young people spend their free time in Russia.

First of all, twenty year ago people were more talkative, communicable and never skipped a chance to speak with someone. They always walked, played, went to theatres, cinemas, cafes. Now young people tend to avoid public places and doesn't really want to have a conversation with somebody. They preferred to stay at home alone after work or school and doing house hold chores, playing computer, reading books. Modern young people describe this way of spending their free time as "harmonizing with" yourself.

To be honest, I think that these changes have been for the worse. I'm not saying that our generation is lost, just telling that there are more interesting and useful ways of spending free time. And I'm not hating on those who like to be alone and doing all the stuff I described earlier. I only want to share my opinion.

I think that in the future people are going to ~~to~~ ~~back~~ return to their earlier ways of spending
